

Jenny Lee (she/her) is an attorney living and working in Minneapolis. She has devoted her legal career to advocating on behalf of those without power. She is presently a partner at Engstrom Lee, where she represents workers whose hard-earned retirement savings have been squandered due to self-dealing, fraud, and mismanagement. Before that she served as pro bono counsel at a national firm where she worked on immigration, family law, and civil rights matters. Prior to moving to Minnesota, Jenny was a staff attorney at the ACLU's National Office where she worked on protecting and expanding abortion access across the country, including in Alaska, Wisconsin, Alabama, and Florida. She is a graduate of Yale College and the University of Chicago Law School.
